CADETS OF THE 1968 ROTC SUMMER CAMP

During this ROTC Summer Camp much knowledge has been imparted and many lessons have been learned by all of us involved in the six weeks of intensive training. In my opinion, this has been one of the most highly successful summer camps at Fort Bragg. This was assured from its beginning by the professional excellance of the cadre and support personnel and an unrelenting desire on their part to ensure that you received the best training possible. This was, in no small part, enhanced by your high morale and motivation. Singly and collectively, each of you have met every challenge with vigor and in keeping with the finest traditions of the United States Army.

This yearbook has been prepared by your fellow cadets to furnish all of us with fond memories far into the future.

It has been an honor and a privilege to have served as your Deputy Camp Commander. Because of your performance, I will be able to recall with professional pride and admiration our association during this encampment. And most important, I have full confidence that each of you will fulfill your leadership role in the best traditions of the Army and our Nation, thus reflecting credit upon yourself, your family and your school.

May the future bring you success in all your endeavors.

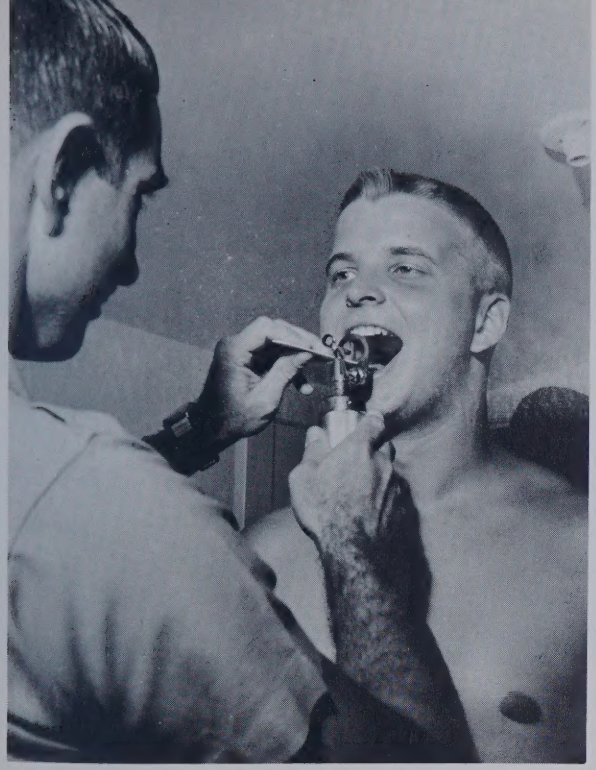
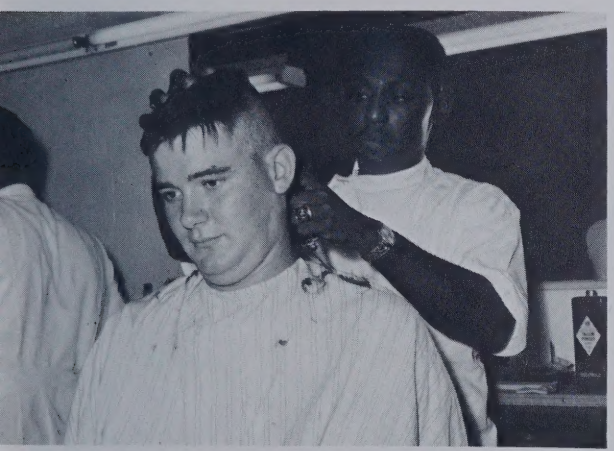
COMPANY LIFE



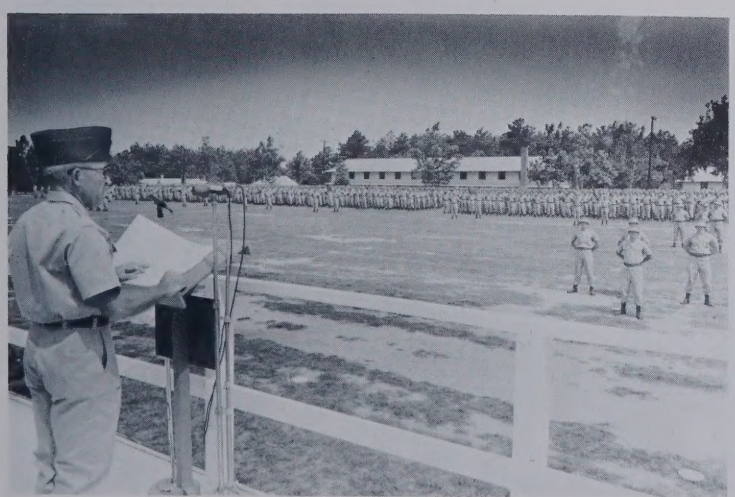
"You might as well get used to gagin' boy - it won't be the last time while you're here!"



"I hate this place, I hate this place . . ."

15 June 1968 proved to be quite an eventful day for the 3,500 ROTC cadets reporting to Fort Bragg. The weekend was spent in medical examinations, clothing issues, and hair cut operations, culminating in the opening parade on Monday. After the adjustment to Army life during those few days, the camp routine began.

"Don't laugh Mom, I wore these pants for six weeks."



. . . and then came the Opening Ceremony.

"Yep, that's my rifle; same ole red sand in there."

"The word" was handed out by the "tac" officers many times in this manner.

The daily routine took shape with the morning issue of rifles, physical training runs, periods of instruction, and the rush to the Lister Bag for relief of a dry, dusty throat. Foot blisters soon appeared and the Medics took a meaningful place in the cadet's life.

"Dad, you know that ole cow we have . . . well we get water from the 'Army Cow' here."

The first week of P.T. caused many cadets to swear off cigarettes, liquor, etc.

This scene was repeated many times during summer camp.

"If Mary could see me now . . . cleaning a rain coat with a shoe brush, wow!"

The equipment issued to each cadet had to be kept in A-1 condition. Every day witnessed the cleaning of rifles, pistol belts, canteens, and other Army issue. Out of all the equipment issued, the M-14 and the Army boot were the most demanding by far.

"I love it here, I love it here, I've found myself a home."

Much time was also spent inspecting our equipment. Having things cleaned was S.O.P. and it soon became obvious that equipment inspection was standard also. Inspection was the test of the cleaning process.

"I don't care if Fred is here, I'm ready for him."

"There's got to be room for my Combat Meal, even if I have to leave everything else."

The full field display represented quite some preparation.

"If you can eat this, you're a better man than I ever want to be."

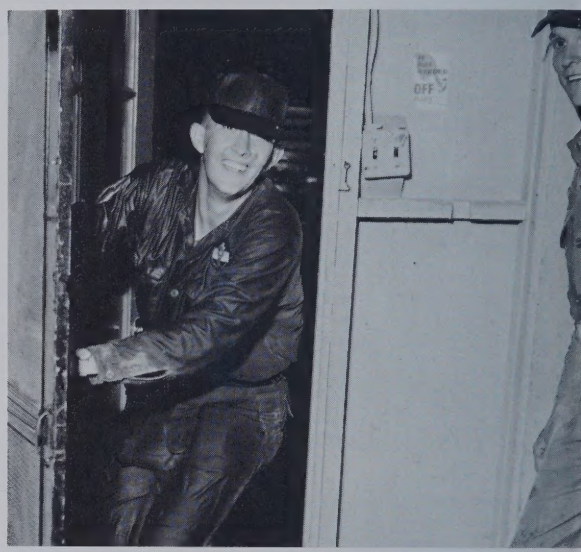
Before the day was over, each garbage can was cleaner than the cleanest K.P.

The extra duties which camp offered ranged from interior guard to K.P. Without a doubt, the experience of Army K.P. duty was an unforgetable one providing a tired body and an even more tired mind - not to mention the knowledge obtained in cooking.

. . . and when the cadets were in the field, guess who did all the work.

. . . even the floors in the Mess Hall were thoroughly cleaned and waxed.

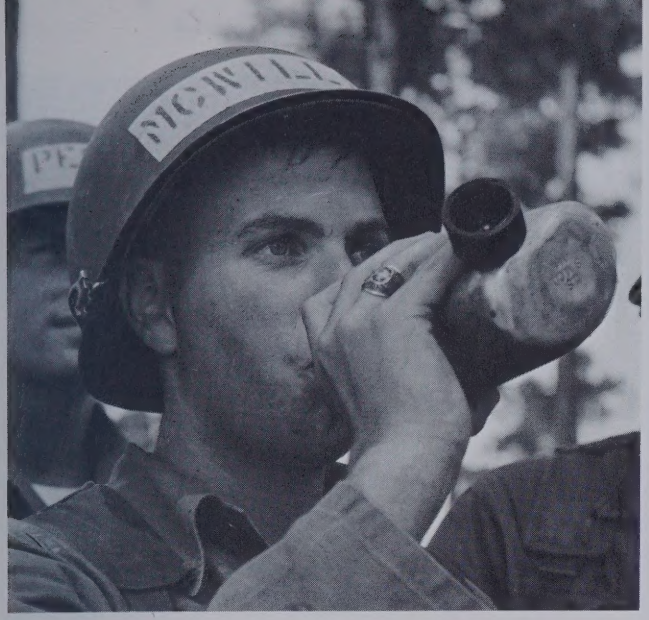
"Aghh! Boy is this stuff bad!"



The moments of "time off" were few and far between and maximum use was made of them no matter if they came during chow or five-minute-break period. These times were usually spent sleeping as the normal ten-hour sleep night was non-existant at Fort Bragg.

Talk about relief, you just don't know the half of it.

"Prepare to rack . . . RACK!"



Brief glimpses of reflectful moments came once in a while - a cup of water over the head, a look in a mirror, a drink of water, a short nap - these times provided a welcomed relief in a busy schedule.

"Drink up, men, it may be a long time before we get another chance."

"This is the best thing I've felt all month."

"No hair, dirty face, no fingernails . . . Fort Bragg is sure a great place."

"So that's what a girl looks like. I almost forgot!"

"You should have seen that AI run when I pointed my rifle his way."

After a long, hot day, off duty hours were spent in a variety of ways from playing cards to having a beer at the cadet lounge. These times were the best of all and they were looked forward to daily.

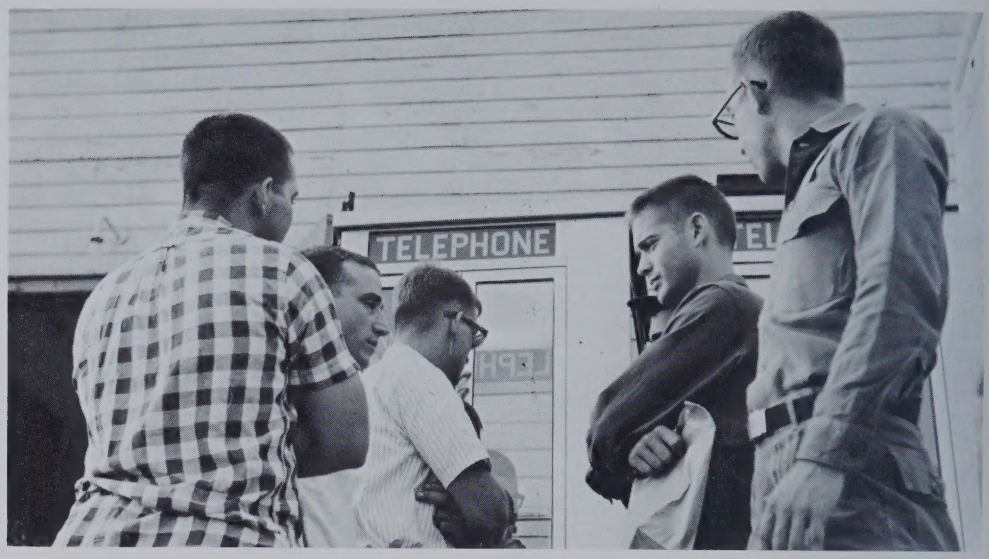
"I'll bet my ___ on this one."

The reward of doing a job well came in the form of a certificate, a good report, or a feeling of self-satisfaction. The task to be performed was often difficult, but each day finally came to a close.

The evening football game often provided relaxation.

"I'd crawl a mile for a Camel, wouldn't you?"

"Thank you, sir."



This scene was repeated night after night as the cadet attempted to call home.

Free time - the time all cadets lived for until camp ended. This portion of the day was spent in many ways, but its true meaning could only be known by the individual cadet who would readily express his feelings of relief when it arrived.

"I hate this bull sooo much I could fall asleep if only they'd give me the time."

"It's been a hard days night, and I'm a sleepin' like a log."

"All right men, today we're gonna G.I. the barracks, right?"

"Here it is Saturday morning and look what I'm doin'."

The final result came when each cadet stood tall at his position in ranks to pass inspection. The pride was there - an inner pride in a job well-done. This end was achieved by every cadet no matter how often the strain of his favorite song ran through his brain - "M-I-C-K-E-Y M-O-U-S-E . . ." Indeed he belonged to a big club now - the United States Army.

"Take it, and don't ever give it back."

WEAPONS

MAJ Hughes stresses fine points on sight picture.

Developing those eight steady - hold factors.

A good shot group helps.

MARKSMANSHIP

All cadets must prove themselves proficient in combat marksmanship in order to fulfill their requirements at summer camp. Many long, hard hours were spent developing accuracy, zeroing, detecting targets, record firing, and much more.

Each cadet must become very familiar with his weapon.

". . . well, we qualified."

Thousands of rounds are spent on the ranges everyday.

The least accurate position.

Firers, watch your lanes!

Range! Elevation! Deflection!

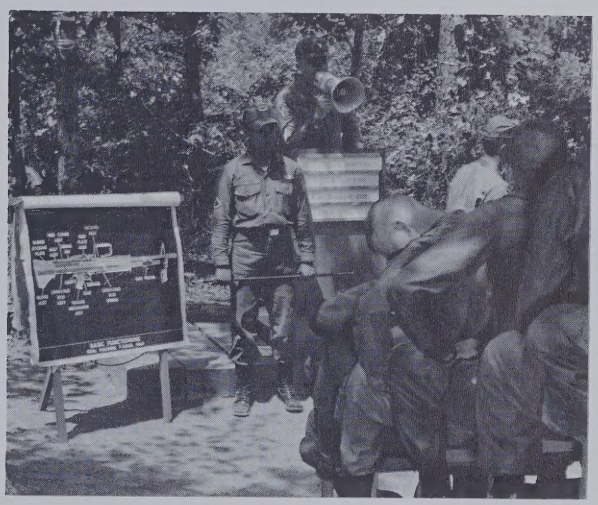
Mortar training NCO instructs cadet on 4.2 Inch Mortar.

WEAPONS

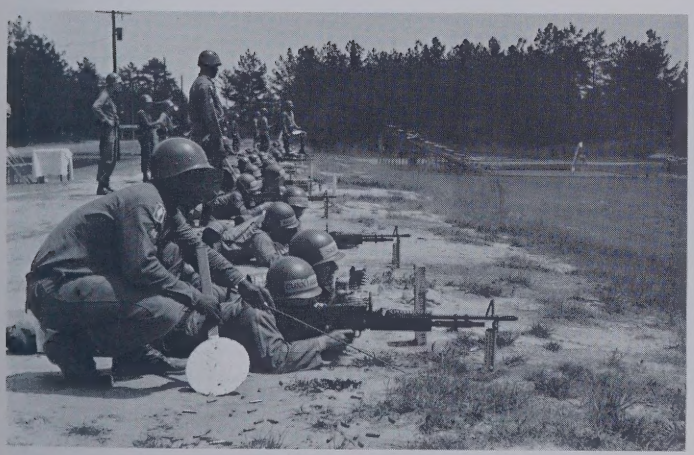
We were acquainted with many different weapons during our training. The 81mm and 4.2 inch Mortars, 106mm RR, 3.5 inch Rocket Launcher, M48 tank, M16, .45 Cal. Pistol, M60 and 50 Cal. machineguns, 105mm and 155mm Howitzers. We learned the basic concepts of each.

M60 machinegun in action!

ORIENTATION



Concurrent training across the road.



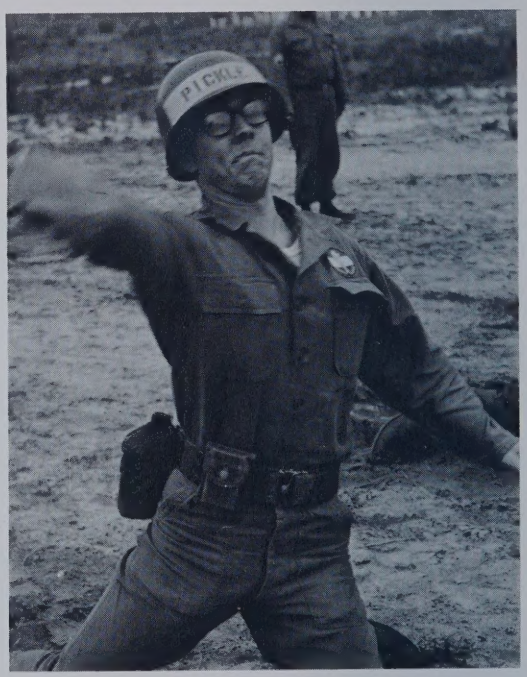
Police up the brass, gentlemen!

AI explains disassembly of M60.

WEAPONS

The 106 team proved quite capable in delivering fast firepower.

Firing the 3.5 was not as easy as it looked.



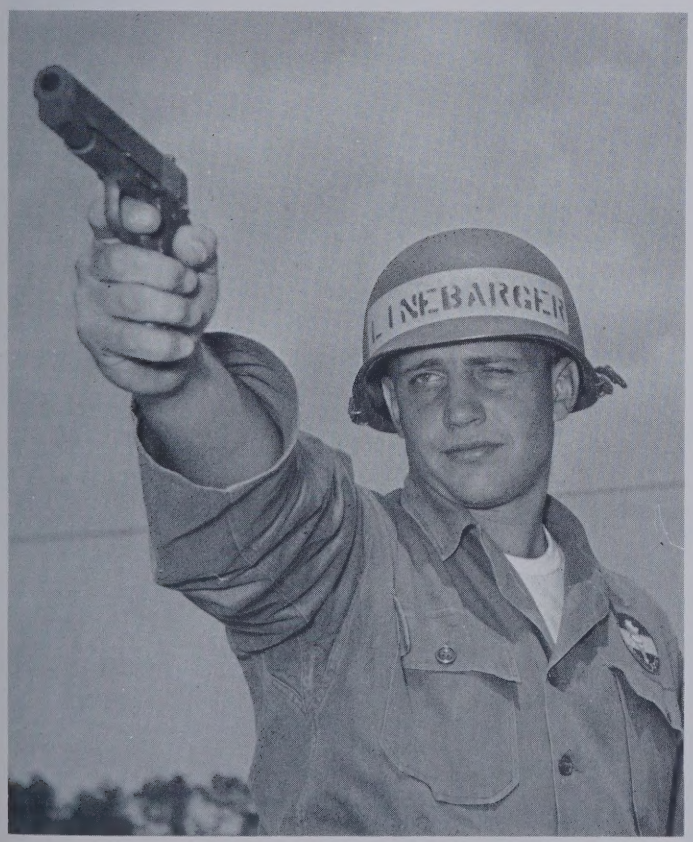
Preview for the PCPT.

The tanks' maneuverability and firepower kept all cadets awake.

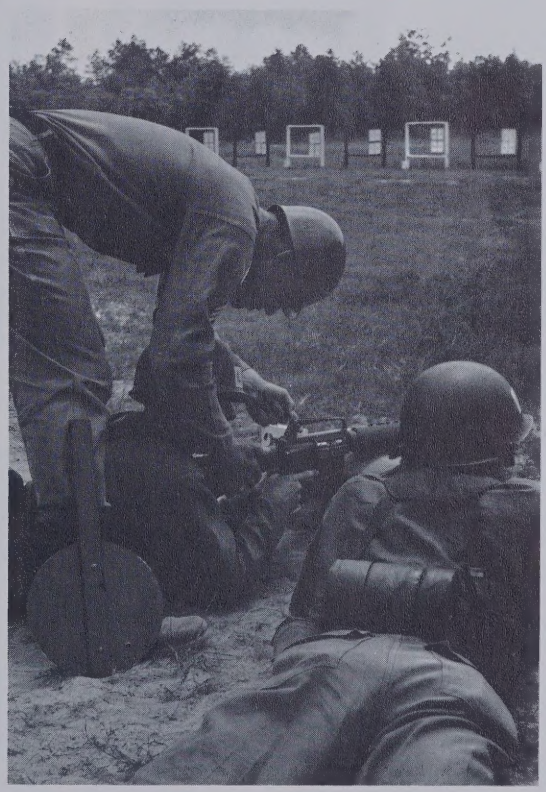
ORIENTATION

The M16 . . . a fine weapon.

.45 Cal. packs a hell of a wallop.



Some of us will be armed with this weapon soon.



Proper instruction yields good results.

Laying mines is pretty easy . . .

The VC have many of these waiting on us.

. . . but taking them up is another subject.

Getting down to the "fine points."

GENERAL MILITARY SUBJECTS

CHEMICAL, BIOLOGICAL, NUCLEAR

CBN warfare plays a major role in the world today as we all found out. Our experience with the CS gas created a great respect for its use. The demonstration gave us much insight into the immense capabilities which this type of warfare has to offer.

A rewarding experience?

Atropine injection takes guts.

A just reward for a brave cadet.

Talcum powder for some, the real thing for others.

Thickened fuel makes a rather big band.

White phosphorus is quite pretty but quite lethal.

55 gallons of napalm can't miss.

Flame-thrower in action.

FIRST AID

The lessons we learned here in first aid may help to save a buddy's life in combat. We studied the Four Basic Life-saving Steps, the techniques of recognizing and treating casualties, and we became familiar with the field hospital and air evacuation.

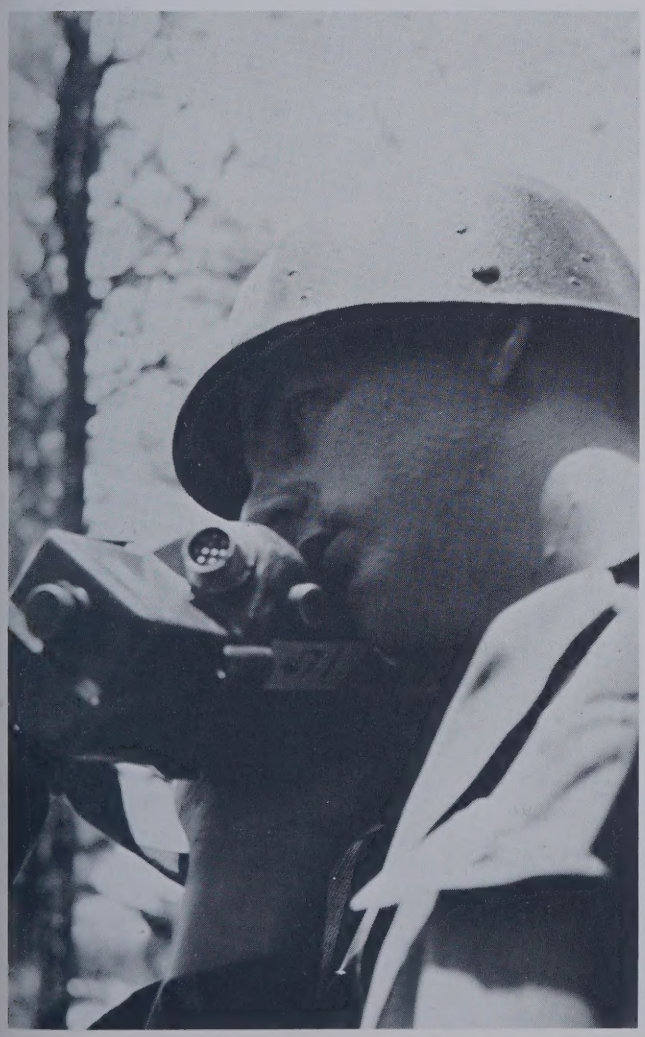
COMMUNICATIONS

Control of your unit depends on accurate communications on all levels. We learned about the different types of radios with ranges from one mile to distances around the world. We were taught the principles and techniques of laying commo wire, and the proper use of the SB 22 switchboard.

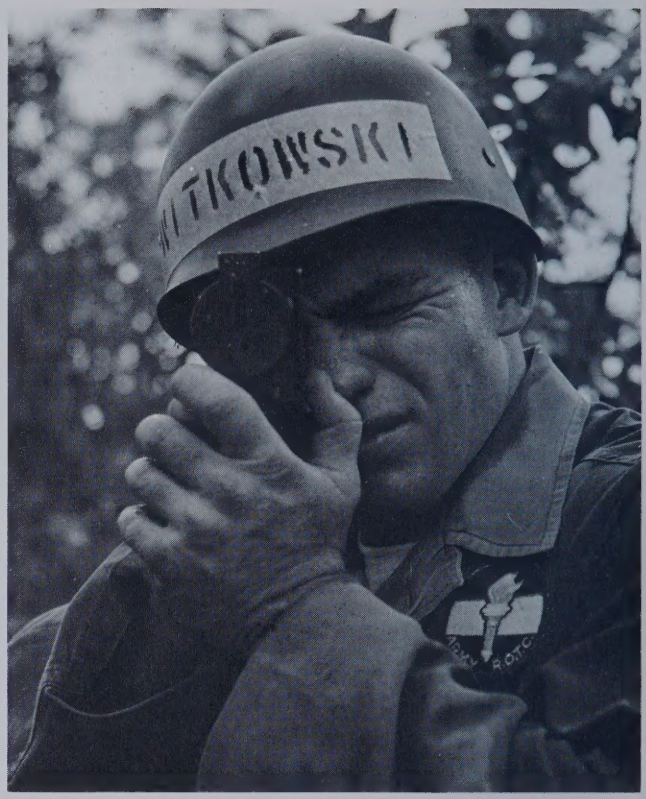


Concurrent training station on laying WD1/TT wire.

MAP READING

Our block of instruction on map reading and land navigation carried us from the early dawn hours to the late hours of the night. Both day and night compass courses proved very challenging in attempting to familiarize us in finding our way.

Some cadets just couldn't get the hang of it.



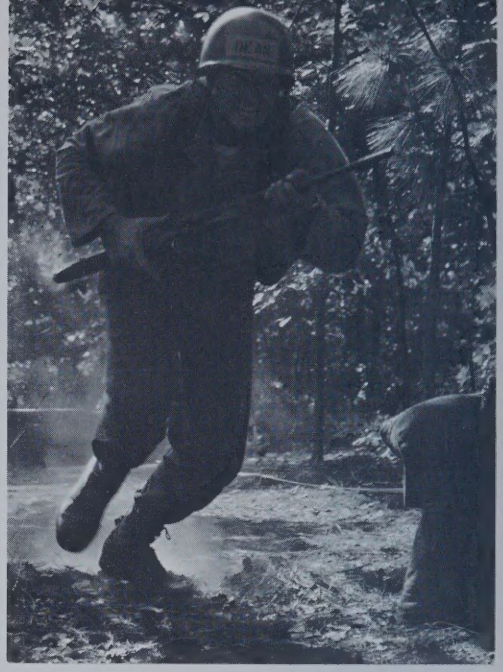
"Straight ahead."

And others managed quite well.

Without team work we would have all been lost.

TACTICS

KILL . . . the spirit of the bayonet fighter.



The final assault.

CLOSE COMBAT

To effectively engage the enemy in combat, cadets must learn the basic fundamentals of close combat. A combination of bayonet, grenade and M14 training provide a good background.

Low-crawl can be dirty, but it can save your life.

Double-time back.

Move out!

Point squad moves down the road.

ADVANCE GUARD

Security is the foremost word in combat. The advance guard establishes frontal security to act as an early warning device for the main body. We all learned exactly how important this guard is through practical application and exercise.

Advance guard must clear obstacles.

Movement is slow and must be well-coordinated.

Radio is the primary means of communication to the main force.

Making sure everything works before moving toward objective.

SQUAD IN THE ATTACK

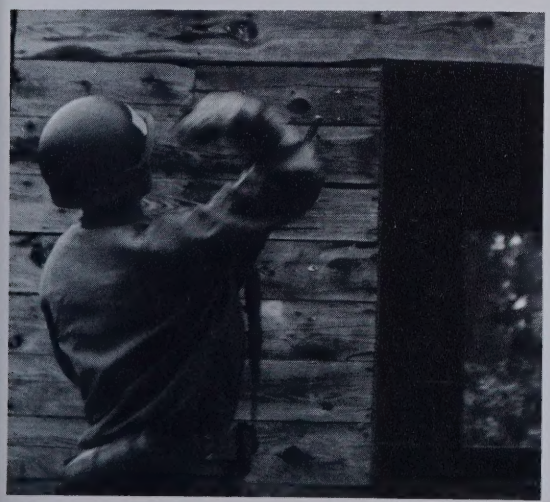
Observation is always important.

During this phase of our tactics training we learned the basic fundamentals of battledrill. The squad leader determines which one of the four squad formations he will use. His decision is influenced by the terrain and the enemy situation.

COMBAT IN VILLAGES

Search and clear was the order of the day. Control was the prime factor in determining whether we accomplished the mission. We became familiar with entering buildings through rooftops and windows and making sure that we didn't trip any booby traps on the way.

Making excellent use of the grapling hook.



Use grenades for the heavy work.

Always try to enter the building from the top.

PLATOON IN THE DEFENSE

Seizing our objective was one thing, but defending it was still another. We learned how to properly set up a good defensive position with maximum security, well-placed crew served weapons, good fields of fire, overlapping sectors of fire and much more.

"Gotta dig in quick."

M60 must have the best available fields of fire.

OP's provide for early warning.

A well-camouflaged foxhole is a must.

Double-Apron barbed wire creates a "nice" obstacle.

A good diagram helps explain the attack order.

Communication is a must in the attack.

On line for the final assault.

PLATOON IN THE ATTACK

Squad in the attack was just a prelude to what was next. Control of 50 some odd men proved to be not quite so easy. We all found out there was still a lot we had to learn in order to conduct a successful attack.

Danger area!

Once on the objective, consolidate immediately.

Very, very quiet.

In the thick of things.

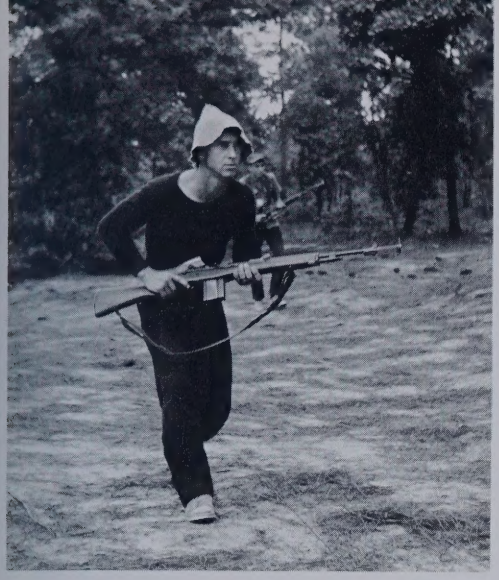
PATROLLING

Whether it be combat or reconnaissance the patrol is of vital importance to the overall mission of its unit. Being small in size, it affords great maneuverability in searching out the enemy. Either by day or by night the patrol is there.

Moving out from the OP.

Nothing stops the patrol.

Camouflage is of great necessity.



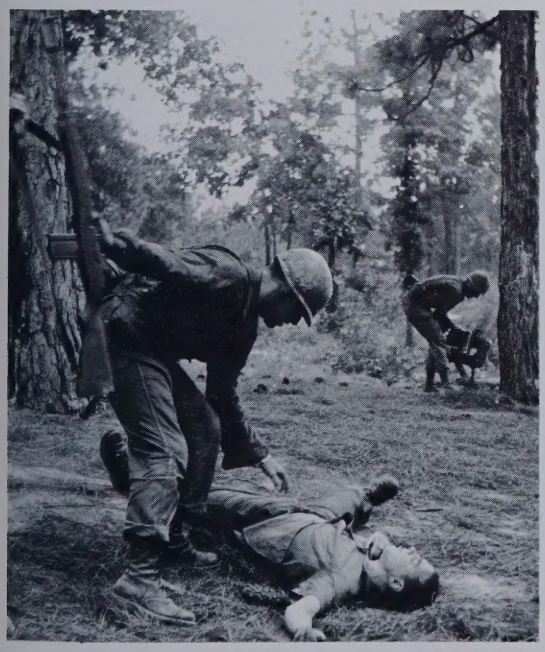
Enemy approach the killing zone.

The trap is sprung.

M60 waits for the enemy.

AMBUSH

For an unsuspecting enemy the ambush can have a devastating effect. Without the element of surprise, though, the tables can very well be turned. We learned the factors of conducting a successful ambush and the training culminated with a realistic practical exercise.



Taking weapon and ammo from dead aggressor.

Check the dead and wounded and move out!

FIELD PROBLEMS TEST

Looking for intelligence information on a dead aggressor.

Cadet receiving his order for the problem.

This leadership reactionary course was designed to test the cadet's ability to make the correct decisions under simulated tactical situations. It was up to the cadet to issue his order to his men and to choose the right solution to his problem.

Questioning wounded member of yesterday's friendly patrol.

FIELD TRAINING EXERCISE

The Army's 8th wonder of the world——C-rations.

The field training exercise was the "highlight" of the fifth week of our training. Everything that we learned up until this time was put to use on the FTX. We came in contact with swamps, ambushes, snipers, and a road march. Cadets "dug in" on their blocking positions. Recon Patrols were sent out at night to check out enemy activity. After taking and consolidating the objective we walked the last 1000 meters to the trucks!

Cadet searches top left pocket of aggressor for S-2 information.

34' TOWER

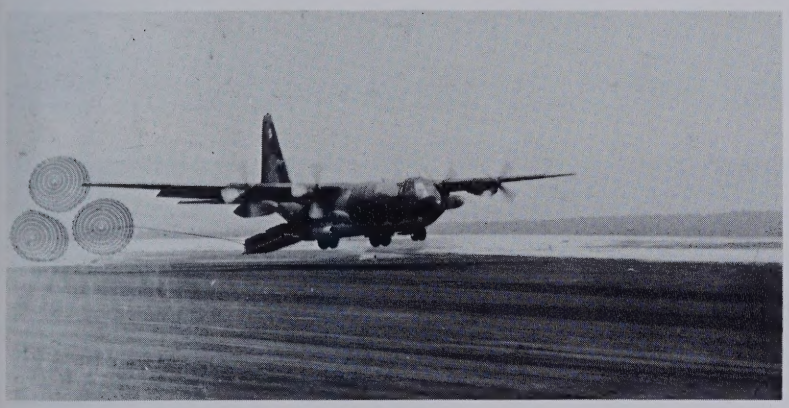
We got a taste of airborne school at the 34' Tower. The front leaning rest position was constantly in use. It seemed like we were in a push-up contest. "O.K. cadet, hit it!"

"When you get to the mound drop give me one - zero."

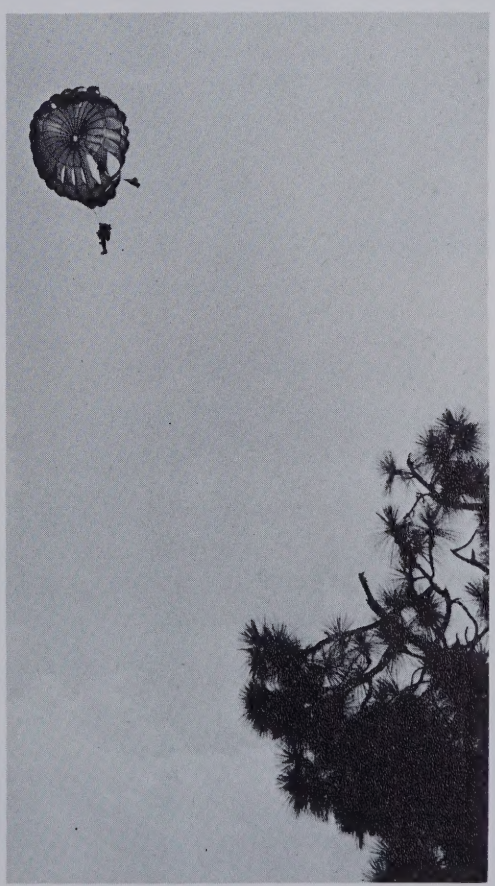
Making sure the harness is tight.

"Airborne!!"

COMBINED ARMS DEMONSTRATION



The last week of our training was highlighted with a very enlightening demonstration presented by the Special Forces, 82nd Airborne and United States Air Force. Included were techniques in air-drops, air-lifts, weapons, artillery, air strikes and much more.



COMMISSIONING AND CLOSING CEREMONIES

For nearly all of us our last formal formation was held just prior to the closing ceremony on the parade field. The next morning at 0800 a number of us received our commissions and immediately found ourselves officers in the United States Army.

During the period of 9-11 July, various institutional representatives from our colleges and universities came to Fort Bragg for an orientation on ROTC Summer Camp and to check up on the cadets from their institutions.

VISIT BY SCHOOL REPRESENTATIVES

Cadets discussing old times.

One of the school parties.

Official testing the M16.

They also shot the .45 Cal. pistol.
